Robin Jones, admin/HR assistant for Delaware Township in Pike County, has made more than 1,500 masks, many of which she donated to the Delaware Township Volunteer Fire Company, the Delaware Township Public Works Department, and other organizations in the township.

Lisa Everett, secretary-treasurer of Duncan Township in Tioga County, helps package masks as a member of the Tioga County COVID Task Force. The group has packaged more than 10,000 masks for local businesses to give to patrons who might not have one.

Ed Mocarsi, emergency management director for Nockamixon Township in Bucks County, has been busy during the pandemic locating and distributing personal protective equipment for the three local fire companies and the regional emergency medical services agency.

Roe Simonini, resident of East Penn Township in Carbon County, made masks for the township staff and volunteer fire department when it was nearly impossible to find them at the start of the pandemic.

Pete DeWire, chairman of the Penn Township, Snyder County, Recreation Committee, and his wife Cookie have dedicated countless hours to helping their community. During the pandemic, they made close to 2,000 masks for Evangelical Community Hospital in Lewisburg, Geisinger Medical Center, local businesses, nursing homes, and other organizations and individuals. Evangelical Hospital loved the youth and children masks they made with stickers.
